When Notation Pro is tested in a Windows environment, it does the following: - Open icon - Open Windows Explorer window - Create a new folder named "Notation Pro" - Copy file "data" to "Notation Pro" folder - Copy file "version.config" to "Notation Pro" folder - Create a shortcut to "Notation Pro" folder The purpose of this document is to describe this approach in greater detail. I hope this will prove to be useful for others. As a reminder, when a project is opened via Data Driven Approach for the first time, the "data" folder will not be created. When not in a Windows environment, all the links will be exactly the same: I want to use this approach with my C++ project, but it seems that there are two ways in which the user can be prompted for a file. One is with a Browse function and the other is with a Save As. Does Notation Pro support the second way? Also, I cannot find the links where a file is created (e.g. the NotationPro folder). I think those links are needed to open a project when there are no projects on the system. Is this correct? Is there a way that I can code the Browse function in order to create a NotationPro folder and open the project? Otherwise, I must save the project as a file (and "edit" the file to change the name to NotationPro). I wanted to use Notation Pro with one of my projects. While it works with other 3D programs, I did not have any luck with Notation Pro. I created a small project and several macros. I was surprised when the Notation Pro window appeared and I clicked the data symbol in the project. I click the "New Data Definition" icon, and then I click "New Stylized Data File". The NotationPro icon appears and I can use the data file in my
