Technical Field The present invention relates to a semiconductor light emitting device and a method for manufacturing the same, and more particularly, to a GaN-based semiconductor light emitting device, the light-emitting efficiency of which can be improved in the horizontal direction, and a method for manufacturing the same. 2. Background Art A light emitting diode is a semiconductor device, which is used as a light source such as a light bulb and an indicator of various electronic devices. In recent years, a color light emitting diode has been developed, in which the light emission wavelength can be changed by adjusting the composition ratio of a compound semiconductor compound. Such a color light emitting diode is used in various applications such as a backlight unit of a liquid crystal display (LCD), an LED illumination light source, a full-color display apparatus, etc. In order to obtain a white color light, a color light emitting diode emits both a red light and a blue light and uses fluorescence of the other color, which is generated from the blue light, to convert to the red light. When the red light and the blue light are generated from a blue light-emitting region, a white color light can be obtained as a mixture of the red light and the blue light. However, light loss occurs in the color light emitting diode, and as a result, the light-emitting efficiency of the diode is decreased. In addition, in the case of the blue light, the light-emitting efficiency is lower than that of the red light, and thus, when the red light and the blue light are mixed, the white color light can be obtained with a high brightness, which has been a disadvantage of the conventional LED. In order to solve the foregoing problem, a light emitting diode emitting
